The Association of Steel Distributors Announces James Barnett of Grand Steel as ASD President

CHICAGO - The Association of Steel Distributors (ASD) recently announced that James Barnett, a 40-year industry veteran and president of Grand Steel Products, Inc. in Wixom, MI, has taken the helm of the association as its 2010 president. Barnett will provide strategic direction for the organization and is committed to taking on the ASD leadership role. Barnett has been an active member of ASD since 1995 and a member of the ASD Board of Directors since 2000. ASD members include service centers, distributors, steel mills, transportation companies and service related companies who are all viable partners to the steel distribution marketplace.

"I am honored to be president of an organization I have great respect for the organization and look forward to taking ASD into its 67th year of serving the steel distribution community," Barnett says. "I am committed to filling the shoes of our past presidents and I know we have a bright future."

"Jim is a very dedicated and passionate industry professional," says Ron Pietrzak, ASD executive director. "With his leadership and vision, our association will grow substantially."

Barnett replaces 2008-2009 president Tom Smith of B & D Steel, located in Holland, PA, who will now assume the role of immediate past president. Joining Barnett on the ASD Executive Committee are:
